According to the NHF, 17.9 million adults were suffering from migraine, as compared to 10.7 million with tension-type headache, 6.8 million with cluster headache and 6.1 million with chronic daily headache. In general, patients reported headaches more often during the summer months. The NHF's Headache Condition and Health-Related Quality of Life Survey was conducted by the Washington University Global Health Institute (WU GRI) from March 9-24, 2012, and used a sample of 3,395 adults from across the country. Interviews with respondents were conducted by telephone. Approximately five times more adults reported migraines than those with tension-type headache. About one in every eight adults in the U.S. (12.6 million) were thought to have migraine. The prevalence of migraines was greatest among women, with 20.6 million women and 9.8 million men reporting migraines. Only 1.7 percent of men had migraine, while 12.9 percent of women had migraines. Headaches seem to be more common with age, with 4bc0dbe42
