More particularly, the present invention relates to a hydrogen absorbing alloy having good initial hydrogen absorbing properties and excellent durability when repeatedly used as a hydrogen absorbing material for storing and supplying hydrogen in a rechargeable metal hydride storage. Metal hydride storage has been studied as a means for hydrogen storage which is alternative to a fuel gas, such as LNG (liquefied natural gas) or gasoline, which is used for the purpose of fuel. Metal hydride storage is a type of secondary battery, and it has the same basic structure as that of a secondary battery using a lithium compound. As a metal hydride storage, a hydrogen absorbing alloy is used, and it has already been put into practical use as an electrical power storage device. The hydrogen absorbing alloy is manufactured by forming, in a slurry, a mixture of powder of a hydrogen absorbing material and an electrically conductive material as a conductive base. Metal hydride storage is used not only as a main storage device but also as a secondary storage device, and it is mainly used as a power source of electronic equipment. It is necessary to reduce the size of the storage device. However, there is a problem in that the volume of the storage device becomes large when increasing its capacity. Accordingly, studies have been conducted on achieving a highly-efficient hydrogen absorbing alloy to reduce the amount of hydrogen absorbed from the surroundings and to increase the amount of hydrogen adsorbed by the hydrogen absorbing alloy. For example, Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. 10-208645 discloses a hydrogen absorbing alloy for a metal hydride storage which is constituted by a hydrogen absorbing alloy material containing an iron group element having a face center cubic crystal structure and an alloying element
