President Donald Trump hit out at NBA superstar LeBron James on Friday evening for politicising the issues of the day with a social media post criticizing Trump's treatment of migrants at the southern border. A picture of a father at the US-Mexico border, along with the words: "I am the father. I am the face," was shared by Mr Trump on Twitter, along with a photoshopped image of him working on a home demolition site with the hashtag #nice, accompanied by the words "destroyed homes". Mr James responded to the post, asking Mr Trump where he'd been when his father was separated from his mother at the border while seeking asylum. The post said: "LeBron James was a high school principal. He saw the border when it was long and peaceful. He saw it when it was drugs and crime. He saw it when families were separated. He saw it when there was no water." Mr Trump's first tweet of the day arrived just before 11am ET, and he's been on a roll since. A link to the story about the NBA champion's social media post arrived after the President commented that former Secretary of State and ex-Republican presidential candidate Hillary Clinton "did much worse than" James, just two days after he told Fox News host Jeanine Pirro that her "crime was much greater than" James' alleged "crime" of questioning the President on Twitter.
